No program materials were developed with administrative or training funds this reporting period.

Describe any planning or training events held during the reporting period.

To facilitate the coordinated execution of Washington State's 2015-2019 plan, Department of Commerce met twice monthly with our partners at the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services to discuss execution of the VOCA Plan, coordinate messaging to grantees, and work together to design and execute on the numerous new initiatives that required outreach, communication, and planning of competitive grant processes. In November, 2018, we solicited feedback from all state VOCA subrecipients via a survey. The purpose of the survey was to solicit feedback regarding the continuation of the VOCA state plan, as well as to identify any gaps in service or needs not currently met by the state plan. Responses indicated strong support for continuation of the state plan. On November 29, 2018, we convened a group of statewide stakeholders to discuss the continuation of the state plan and to review the results of the statewide survey. The meeting included representatives from each coalition of service providers as well as representatives of stakeholder networks such as the state Department of Corrections and our Crime Victims Compensation partners. The meeting culminated with stakeholder support of continuation of the state plan.

Describe any program policies changed during the reporting period.

No significant program policies were changed during the reporting period. While we initiated review and update of the policies related to the administration of the Crime Victim Service Center program, modifications were not completed until spring of 2019. The modifications broadened the scope of the Crime Victim Service Center program to require services to all crime types.

Describe any earned media coverage events/episodes during the reporting period.

None.

Describe any coordinated responses/services for assisting crime victims during the reporting period.

One of the coordination activities we did this reporting period was to collaborate with the Washington Association of Prosecuting Attorneys (WAPA) to coordinate advocacy training for Victim Witness Assistants who work with crime victims. What began as a series of informal conversations culminated a five day training for Victim Witness Assistants, utilizing core advocacy training recommendations and best practices in order to ensure that crime victims engaging with prosecutor's offices receive trauma-informed services. The Office of Crime Victim Advocacy also collaborated with the Washington Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs to strengthen and improve safety for victims by upgrading the statewide victim notification system. The system now provides victim notifications not just in English and Spanish, but also in Korean, Tagalog, Russian, Vietnamese, and Somali.

Please discuss the major issues in your state that either assist or prevent victims from receiving assistance during the reporting period.

In Washington State, one issue that assists victims in receiving services is the statewide, regional network of domestic violence, sexual assault, and crime victim service providers. These service providers ensure that services are available to victims of crime in each county through phone and in-person community-based advocacy services. In addition, system-based assistance is provided by victim/witness staff in county prosecutor's offices in order to provide accompaniment and support to victim/witnesses in the criminal legal system. Washington State recently added civil legal assistance through a statewide network of attorney-based service providers. Civil legal assistance is available to domestic violence, sexual assault, and crime victims. An issue that continues to prevent victims from receiving maximum support in Washington State is the requirement to make a report to law enforcement in order to access crime victim's compensation. Many victims do not make a report to law enforcement and this hinders victim assistance programs in assisting crime victims in filing for compensation benefits. Of significant concern is the escalation of challenges faced by immigrant and refugee victims of crime. Typical stories are of survivors being afraid to call the police for fear that either they or the abuser will be deported. There is confusion around whether the jails are cooperating with ICE for deportation holds. Immigrant survivors fear deportation in a way they didn't previously and this fear is limiting their already limited abilities to escape violent relationships. For example, women who are undocumented but have citizen children who are entitled to DSHS benefits (i.e., cash/SNAP/Medicaid) are scared to apply for the benefits. They also do not want us to make housing applications for them or to do anything where their name ends up on any type of official list. They don't want to go and be assessed for housing opportunities and put on the waitlist as it's a government waitlist.

Please describe ways that your agency promoted the coordination of public and private efforts within the community to help crime victims during the reporting period.

Washington State VOCA Assistance Administrators support the coordination of public and private efforts that help crime victims through local subgrantees activities. All VOCA-funded local subgrantees work collaboratively with agencies in their communities to provide victim-centered services. Domestic violence, sexual assault, and crime victim service providers routinely partner with systems, allied professionals, and other service providers to comprehensively support victims.

Please describe any notable activities at the grantee level during the reporting period that improved delivery of victim services.

During this reporting period, Washington State implemented several competitive grant processes for crime victim service programs to enhance current programming and address critical needs identified in the Washington State VOCA planning process. Among the successful applicants were several projects to provide housing advocacy and assistance to crime victims, several projects to provide mobile advocacy in rural areas of the state, a project to provide advocacy services to street youth who had been victimized by crime, a project involving immigration assistance and legal advocacy for immigrant victims of domestic violence, a project administered within the transgender community for transgender victims of crime, and a project to provide crime victim services to members of the Kalispel Indian Tribe.

Please discuss each priority (i.e., child abuse, domestic assault, sexual assault, and underserved) in which VOCA funds have been used to assist crime victims during the reporting period

Child abuse: This reporting period, we continued to work with our new Child Centered Services grant process which currently funds 21 child advocacy centers. We also saw an increase in the number of Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) programs applying successfully for funding. Sexual Assault: Our network of sexual assault providers has similarly benefited from the implementation of Washington's VOCA plan. Advocates are now being compensated at living wages and staff vacancies filled. The state's 37 accredited Community Sexual Assault Programs continue to guarantee access to every sexual assault victim in Washington, adult or child, to the services of crisis intervention, information and referral, medical/legal advocacy, and support. In addition to these core services, providers across the state continue to offer specialized sexual assault services (therapy, support groups, medical social work) as well as culturally and community specific advocacy and therapy services. Domestic violence: Throughout this reporting period, the strength of our Domestic Violence Shelters continues to grow. With the increase in VOCA funds, we were able to fund these programs more fully than previously, allowing them to provide quality services to more victims than ever before. In addition, many of our DV shelter providers applied for and received one of the complementary competitive grants for enhancement of current services, which has allowed them to try out new modalities of service, including several different forms of housing advocacy. Underserved: Providing better access to underserved populations continues to be a top priority for Washington State. In addition to existing programs within our Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault programs to provide services to marginalized or underserved communities, we now have crime victim advocacy programs established in 16 of the 29 federally recognized Tribes of Washington State. These programs provide a coordinated and collaborative multidisciplinary response to support fundamental intervention, crisis services, advocacy, and outreach to individuals who have been hurt and harmed, their families, and the community and provide trauma-informed, person-centered, culturally rooted, traditional, and holistic services to victims of crime, their families, and the community.

Please briefly describe efforts taken to serve Victims of Federal crime during the reporting period.

Most of our efforts related to victims of Federal crime would be via our various human trafficking programs. We currently fund six human trafficking programs around the state, and many of them collaborate closely with the FBI.

Please identify any emerging issues or notable trends affecting crime victim services in your state during the reporting period.

Related to domestic violence services, there has been a significant increase in community-based domestic violence subgrantees reporting that the lack of housing (both affordable and market-rate) is having a huge impact on survivors being able to safely transition from emergency domestic violence shelter, even when the survivor has resources. Consequently, the average length of stay in shelter appears to be increasing. Related to sexual assault services, we are seeing areas of the state where the intersections of child advocacy center services and community based sexual assault advocacy services need attention. While we have many examples of these service models working collaboratively, there continues to be confusion about roles and responsibilities, specific to advocacy and confidentiality. Additionally, our state has offered numerous funding opportunities in the past year, and continue to see a need for services to older/elder sexual assault survivors. It appears not many programs across the state are currently prepared to develop programming specific to this population. We continue to hear of increases in hate crimes and increased need for services to marginalized communities, particularly undocumented immigrants.

Please briefly outline any staffing retention issues that your victim assistance program has and why these issues may occur during the reporting period.

The Washington State Office of Crime Victims Advocacy and Department of Social and Health Services both have historically high staff retention rate overall. Staff has served as program coordinators, section managers, and director for up to twenty-five years. While the state government does not provide compensation at the same rate as the private sector, it does offer reasonable benefits, union membership, and a work/life balance. With the recent increase in the VOCA Assistance award, administrative funds have allowed the department to hire more staff in order to develop and implement new subgrant programs, shift workloads to be more equitable, and increase staff's ability to address more complex issues.

Please explain your state process to publicize its victim assistance funding for services to victims of crime during the reporting period.

We advertise the availability of funding via our agency website, via email communications with interested parties, via word of mouth, and via the Washington Electronic Business Solutions (WEBS) system, which is a database that allows member of the public to receive notification of funding opportunities open to the public. We also work with our current grantees to spread the word with entities in their communities to whom they refer victims or from whom victims are referred, to broaden awareness of the availability of funding. Our state coalitions also publicize the information.

Please explain how your state is able to direct funding to new/underserved populations during the reporting period.

Funding is directed to underserved populations through Washington State's network of Crime Victim Service Centers. These regional direct service providers reach victims of elder abuse, fraud, identity theft, hate crime, property crime, vehicular assault, kidnapping, and robbery. Crime Victim Service Centers are comprised of mainstream, community specific, and culturally specific organizations. Specific funding for community and culturally specific services is set aside within this subgrant program. New service providers and populations may be selected through a collaborative community planning process, which occurs approximately every two years. Funding is also directed to marginalized communities and Native American communities through sexual assault service providers. These direct service providers reach child, youth, and adult victims of sexual assault and their non-offending families/caregivers. New service providers and populations for Specialized Sexual Assault Services may be selected through a collaborative community planning process, which occurs approximately every two years. Additionally, Washington State releases a competitive solicitation for Marginalized and Native American Communities Sexual Assault Services. Additional state funding is directed to underserved populations of victims of domestic violence through the Washington State Domestic Violence Prevention Account for non-shelter-based services. State funding for shelter-based services to subgrantees serving culturally specific populations is considered through an annual non-competitive application process. The Washington State VOCA State Plan 2015-2019 directs funding to new/underserved populations through Tribal Government, By and For, Human Trafficking, and Specific Services/Crimes subgrant programs. During this reporting period, OCVA and DSHS staff conducted outreach to communities across the state to discuss the availability of funding. All current grantees were asked to identify and forward information about grant opportunities to relevant service providers in their area, and multiple conference calls and webinars were held to promote the opportunity and encourage applications from providers who may not have previously received public funding. Outreach to Tribal Governments was extensive, and led to the successful implementation of our Tribal Initiative, which now funds 16 of the federally recognized tribes in our state. In addition to these efforts, all of our current grantees are strongly encouraged to conduct community planning sessions in their geographic regions to identify new partners from underserved populations that would strengthen the network of services available to every victim in Washington State. We continue to look for ways to fund new/underserved populations who have never received our funding before. One approach we initiated is to begin setting aside portions of funding for specific populations. We hope in the next reporting period to set aside a portion of funds specifically for organizations that have not received VOCA funds for the last three years, in an attempt to direct funds to new populations.

Please explain how your program is able to respond to gaps in services during the reporting period.

One way we approached addressing Gaps In Service was through an analysis of all grants funded through the Washington State VOCA Plan since the VOCA increase. We analyzed agencies and projects funded, as well as crime victims served via progress reports, and cross-referenced against state demographics and crime prevalence information. From that, we identified the following areas as priorities for funding in our final application process of the report period: Services in Asotin, Skamania, Whitman, Garfield, Island, Grant, and/or Benton counties, services to immigrants; services to boys and men of color; services to Asian Americans; services to child physical abuse victims, assault victims, DUI/DWI victims, and elder abuse victims. By listing those gaps as priority areas, we were able to garner a number of applications for projects and agencies that addressed those particular areas, and to help close the gaps identified.

Please list and explain any outcome measure(s) that are reported to the governor, legislature, or other state entity during the reporting period.

The hours of services provided by community-based advocates to victims of crime is averaged per subgrantee and provided to the Washington State Office of Financial Management on a quarterly basis. During the reporting period the average number of service hours per subgrantee was 1,146. This outcome measures are part of Washington State's Priorities of Government and both include a target goal and actual count.
